PREFACE

Purpose of this *Student's Vocabulary

In light of the availability of a number of Hebrew vocabulary lists, it is proper to ask why another such list should be put in print. The volumes that first come to mind each make a real contribution. George M. Landes's A Student's Vocabulary of Biblical Hebrew has an obvious advantage in its grouping of Hebrew words by root, a helpful aid in learning vocabulary. The Hebrew Vocabularies of J. Barton Payne present the Hebrew particles in a particularly helpful way. And the small volume by John D. W. Watts (Lists of Words Occurring Frequently in the Hebrew Bible.), which like Payne's is based on William Rainey Harper's Hebrew Vocabularies (published in 1890), presents Hebrew vocabulary down to 25 occurrences in a very compact form.

However, in my experience in teaching biblical Hebrew on the undergraduate level, I have felt that each of the above excellent works have presented two fundamental problems for entry-level Hebrew students: (1) each volume incorporates a number of separate lists, requiring reference to various parts of the book in order to find all Hebrew words of a given frequency; and (2) the lists themselves are apparently set by somewhat arbitrary word-frequency limits, resulting in lists of greatly variable length. The present work seeks to remedy both of those basic problems.

The lexicon of Old Testament Hebrew contains some 10,000 words in all. Of these, approximately 740 occur fifty times or more. A full 490 occur as hapax legomena by Harold R. Cohen's definition (see volume in Bibliography; pages xv and 6-7). Many more words in the MT occur only once, though other occurrences of that same Hebrew root may also appear.

The Aramaic lexicon consists of approximately 650 words. Since the amount of Aramaic text in the OT is so much less than that of Hebrew text, the number of occurrences of Aramaic words is lower.

For the Hebrew vocabulary sections (Sections 1-5) an attempt has been made to include every word that occurs ten times or more. The one exception to this inclusive statement has to do with proper nouns: only those personal and place names that are used fifty times or more are included. The primary reason for including proper nouns at all is that while some Hebrew place names and personal names are reasonably "transparent" to students familiar with the OT in English translation, many are rather "opaque." This is the case because the English transliteration that the student knows often reflects Greek forms more than the original Hebrew name. For examples of the latter, see "Isaac" (Section 3.F), or "Solomon" (2.C).

A section containing Hebrew words occurring less than ten times was prepared for this project. Simply for considerations of length it has not been included in this volume. (It was twice as long as Sections 1-4, both in number of entries and estimated page length!) Most Hebrew students would probably find little use for this section of Hebrew vocabulary.

In the case of the Aramaic vocabulary (Section 6), the effort has been made to include every Aramaic word, except for proper nouns. (No personal or place names have been included, except for a few that occur more than fifty times in Aramaic and Hebrew and thus are listed in Sections 1-4 with a note regarding the number of occurrences in Aramaic.)

A glance at the Table of Contents and the first few vocabulary lists should be enough to clarify the arrangement of this volume. Instead of juggling two or three (or more) different frequency lists, all words of a given frequency range have been gathered into one list. By learning one list (or series of lists)—not two or three—a student can master all Hebrew (or Aramaic) words in that frequency range. Vocabulary learning effort can thus be better focused.

Furthermore, instead of setting arbitrary frequency ranges, this Student's Vocabulary has had as its priority the production of consistently short, manageable lists. In general, this means lists not in excess of thirty words. This ideal holds true until sheer numbers of words of identical frequency make smaller lists impossible, short of artificially breaking up longer lists alphabetically. (You can't have words that occur between 1.5 and 1.2 times in the MT!)

By these two devices then, combining all MT vocabulary into one sequence of lists containing less and less frequently-occurring words, and adjusting frequency ranges to keep lists reasonably short, this Student's Vocabulary has sought to meet the pedagogical shortcomings of other available Hebrew vocabularies.

Resources for the Preparation of A Student's Vocabulary

A number of reference works have been used in the determination of word frequencies. Trial lists were prepared based on frequencies given by Landes and Payne. However, all the words included in this vocabulary have been independently checked—except where the number of occurrences obviously exceed 5000—by an actual count. The primary reference works have been the concordances by Lisowsky and Mandelkern. Additionally, occasional reference has been made to Wigram's Englishman's Hebrew and Chaldee Concordance. Consult the Bibliography for publication details.

Acknowledgements

Without the help and encouragement of a large number of people this volume would not have been produced. In particular I think of two of my students at Pacific Union College, Larry Errett and Cathemae Cecchin. Larry Errett, an able linguist, did some of the earliest work on word counts, especially in the highest frequencies. And Cathie Cecchin, who worked as my secretary for three years during her undergraduate study, has nearly single-handedly accomplished the staggering task of entering encoded text destined to be translated by computer into printed and pointed Hebrew script and (at the cost of even more effort) phonetic spellings.

W. Larry Richards, Religion Department chairman during the more critical stages of research for this volume, provided much-needed encouragement, but also the sorts of scheduling concessions without which this entire project might well have foundered. Small academic institutions seldom have adequate research-support resources. However, the administration of Pacific Union College has been most helpful and cooperative, supplying both the funds for student assistants and the resources and expertise of the College computer facility.

For computer aid and expertise, Harold E. Hunt and Bernard Maron of Autographics, Inc., in Monterey Park, California, richly deserve praise. It was their work that helped turn a concept into reality, and this even though all too often my idea of how to reach reality represented rather different ways of doing things. And here at Pacific Union College, our work of data entry was made immeasurably easier, and therefore more accurate and less time-consuming, by the efforts of Dr. Gilbert Muth, chairman of the Biology Department, a man who writes elegant computer programs that work (no mean feat!).

And finally, to my wife Carola, and to Carmie and Jason, I owe a large debt for constant support and understanding. Work on this project has consumed time that would have otherwise been theirs.

While every reasonable effort has been made to reduce errors to an absolute minimum, it is virtually certain a few such will remain. I would welcome any notices for corrections or improvements. Send these either directly to me or to the publisher.

Learning Hebrew vocabulary requires a lot of time and effort. I hope this volume will help both instructors and students of biblical Hebrew and Aramaic to make the most efficient use possible of their vocabulary study time.

HOW TO USE THIS STUDENT'S VOCABULARY

General Orientation

The purpose of vocabulary study is to learn the correct spelling, pronunciation, and meaning of a set of new (foreign or native) words. Since correct pronunciation of Hebrew words is an integral part of effective vocabulary learning, the student should from the beginning take seriously the matter of consonant and vowel values in Hebrew. For convenience a Table of Values has been provided for reference. However, these values will simply have to be committed to memory before efficient study of Hebrew vocabulary can begin.

Beyond the phonetic value of the Hebrew consonants and vowels themselves, Hebrew pronunciation is also determined by several other interrelated factors:

(1) Syllable division. Hebrew syllables may be either "open" (consisting of a consonant followed by a vowel) or "closed" (a consonant, a vowel, and a consonant—in that order). For the rules governing the use of long or short vowels (and non-vowels) in a Hebrew word, the student should consult his/her grammar. (The "half-open syllables" are discussed below under "Phonetic Spelling.")

(2) Use of šəwâ. Pronunciation of Hebrew words also depends upon a determination as to whether the "non-vowel" šəwâ is "vocal" (stands under the opening consonant of a syllable) or "silent" (under the closing consonant of a syllable).

(3) Accent. The placement of the stress in a Hebrew word can materially affect its pronunciation. This is especially obvious when the form of a word changes, for example in the formation of a plural or the addition of suffixes. In this vocabulary, accent marks are only used for multi-syllable Hebrew words that are stressed on other than the final syllable. The mark ˘ is used.

(4) Furtive pátaḥ. Some Hebrew words that end in guttural-letters (especially  $\aleph$  and  $\varepsilon$ ) must be treated uniquely in pronunciation. Though the final consonant has a pátaḥ under it, the vowel is pronounced before the consonant. Note that furtive pátaḥ is written in phonetic spelling as a raised a (˘). The common practice, observed herein, is not to show a syllable division in phonetic spelling for furtive pátaḥ. Contrary to the practice of some grammars and lexicons, in this vocabulary the Hebrew forms show the accent mark. (Example:  $\varepsilon\aleph\aleph$ ,  $\aleph/\aleph^{\text{˘}}$ .)

Because of these and other variables, it was decided to include in this vocabulary a phonetic rendition (transliteration) of each form presented. In cases where more than one Semitic form is involved, transliterations are given in the same order as the Hebrew (or Aramaic) words. Syllable divisions and stress accents are also indicated.

Beyond proper spelling and pronunciation, the student needs to learn the meaning of the Hebrew words he/she is studying. The definitions that have been provided in this volume are basically correct, and have been chosen in consultation with standard Hebrew lexicons (particularly William L. Holladay's A Concise Hebrew and Aramaic Lexicon of the Old Testament). These meanings are in no sense full and exhaustive. For the meanings of nouns in various contexts, or of verbs in different contexts or in derived conjugation stems, the student must consult a trustworthy dictionary or lexicon. See the Bibliography for a number of helpful and reliable lexicons and dictionaries. Individual language teachers may wish for whatever reason to supplement or emphasize (and even in some cases supplant) given definitions. But in general the meanings given for the Hebrew words in this vocabulary have been chosen with the beginning student in mind, and do provide base meanings that will serve those needs.

This Student's Vocabulary can be used to great advantage along with A Reader's Hebrew-English Lexicon of the Old Testament by Armstrong, Busby, and Carr. By simply learning the Hebrew vocabulary down to fifty occurrences, about 739 words in all, a student should be able to read plain Hebrew text by following along in the appropriate section of the Reader's Lexicon, and referring there for all forms which occur less than fifty times (assuming a minimum knowledge of grammar and syntax).

Sample Entry and Explanation

Perhaps the best way to explain how the individual vocabulary entries in this volume are presented is to give examples and provide some detailed explanations. The following entries are in no way complete and exhaustive, but what they do not contain can be easily described.

*וַיִּזְרֹא (Pi)<sup>2</sup> seek<sup>3</sup> [hā/qāš*]<sup>4</sup> 225<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Hebrew/Aramaic Words. An attempt has been made to use forms and spellings that are favored today. In making such choices, personal judgments are inevitable. Not all decisions may seem to every trained reader to be the best ones. Hopefully no decision will mislead the beginning student. One such judgment relates to Hebrew and Aramaic words spelled with a long "o." In very many cases the word appears in the MT spelled with both "defective hōlem" ( , ô) and with "full hōlem" ( , ô). This vocabulary has not achieved consistency on the matter: if you can not find a word under one spelling, try the alternate spelling before giving up! (The same goes for full and defective spellings with— and without— yōd.)

a. Verbs: unpronounceable words are more difficult to learn—at least if the ear helps at all in vocabulary study. For this reason all verb roots have been provided with vowels. In the case of verbs that only occur in non-Qal stems (and are thus left unpointed in most lexicons), this Student's Vocabulary gives to the root those vowels that pertain to the (missing) Qal form. Since this form is hypothetical, an asterisk (*) is placed after the entry. This practice has also been observed for the so-called hollow verbs (verbs with a yōd or wāw in the second position), even though the verb may in fact appear in just that form. (This has been done because there is often uncertainty, and some disagreement, regarding the appropriate vowel.) Furthermore, in many cases the verb, though used in the Qal, may not occur in the third masculine singular even though the asterisk is missing.

b. Nouns, adjectives, prepositions: an asterisk after these forms signals that while this is the dictionary form of the word, for one reason or another the word never appears just this way in the MT. (As a rule, simple changes in form, such as the addition of a suffixed pronoun or the construct state have not been listed in this vocabulary with an asterisk.) An explanation of the reason for the asterisk is provided in the definition section.

c. General comments: the names of ancient Near Eastern countries and their respective gentilic (people-naming) nouns have been combined in single entries, and listed according to total number of occurrences.

Numerals have also been gathered into single entries, corresponding words for multiples of ten ("twenty," "thirty," etc.) being given under the Hebrew word for that number. Numbers from three to ten are identified by the gender of the form. (In that range Hebrew uses feminine numerals for masculine nouns, and vice versa—a device called "chiasmic concord" in some grammars).

Occasionally, particularly for words of low frequency, there is considerable uncertainty even regarding a hypothetical vowel-point assignment. In such cases the Semitic word is followed by a question mark in parentheses (?).

Defective hōlem can be located in a variety of places over a Hebrew word. The practice of placing this vowel point toward the left margin of wider Hebrew consonants has been followed herein, as well as the practice of not double-dotting šim when it is preceded by defective hōlem. Defective hōlem preceding āleph is commonly written over the right margin of the latter, and has been written that way in this volume.

<sup>2</sup> Grammar/Morphology: information of importance or convenience about a word's part of speech, conjugation stem, or person/gender/number is given in abbreviated form preceding the definitions. The meaning of these abbreviations may be found in the list of Abbreviations and Symbols.

In the case of verbs that do not appear in the MT in the Qal stem, the Hebrew form appears in this vocabulary with an asterisk (as mentioned above). The note in parentheses at the beginning of the definition section then indicates the most commonly-used (or the simplest) derived-conjugation stem in which that verb does occur.

In the case of nouns, adjectives, prepositions, and such, the note in parentheses identifies the part of speech and/or the reason why the asterisk has been used.

<sup>3</sup> Word Meaning: levels of difference in the meanings for a given word have been indicated by separating punctuation marks: a comma divides words which are more or less synonymous, whereas a semicolon sets off extended meanings or rather different definitions. Roman numerals in parentheses refer to one of two or more roots with an identical spelling in Hebrew/Aramaic. These designations follow Holladay's lexicon. Definitions are of the Semitic word as given (not, for example, in plural, even if the asterisk means that this word only occurs in the plural form).

Cross references in the vocabulary are identified by Section number and Subsection letter (Example: Cf 1.D).

<sup>4</sup> Phonetic Spelling: as an aid to self-study, each entry includes a phonetic spelling. Beginning students should find this feature to be helpful as they begin to learn Semitic vocabulary, since it will aid in correct pronunciation of Hebrew/Aramaic words, thus enlisting the ear as well in vocabulary learning. It will be necessary to learn the proper values for each symbol from the Table of Values. Syllables are separated by slashes (/). Accented syllables have been indicated, except for mono-syllabic words.

"Half-open syllables" are neither open nor closed. Such syllables appear to defy syllable-formation rules in that they contain a short vowel, are unaccented, but stand without a closing consonant. Printed Hebrew Bibles commonly use a méteḡ to mark these syllables (a short verticle mark just to the left of the vowel point). Lexicons vary in their treatment of half-open syllables. In this volume those few such syllables are not marked in the Hebrew word. Rather, in the phonetic spelling the syllable is followed by an exclamation point (Example: מְעִרְקָה, ma!/'āra/ká).

<sup>5</sup> Number of Occurrences: counts for Hebrew words are inclusive and for that reason somewhat overlapping. This means, for example, that a Qal active participle may be counted among the occurrences of the verb, and counted again when used as a noun. Such situations are limited primarily to words which occur often enough as substantives to justify also treating them as a vocabulary entry in their own right. In the case of Qal participles, only those occurring ten times or more have been listed in their own entries.

Commonly, word counts include forms of the word that have been prefixed (by the article or prepositions), pluralized, and/or suffixed (by pronouns). In some situations in which such forms have become standardized (and are numerous), prefixed or suffixed forms are listed in separate entries. For verbs, the indicated count includes not only the implied or indicated verbal stems (Qal, Hif'il, etc.), but all stems in which that verb appears.

Word counts from Lisowsky's concordance include Qarê readings as well as normal occurrences. With proper nouns (where given), all occurrences of a given name are included, even though in many cases more than one referent is intended.

In cases where Mandelkern and Lisowsky disagree as to number of occurrences, the general practice has been to enter the higher of the counts, unless further work (sometimes including entry-by-entry comparisons) has made it clear the lower number is to be preferred.

Words identified as occurring 5000 times occur more than 5000 times; no attempt has been made to precisely establish the occurrences of these twelve Hebrew words.

<sup>6</sup> Root Number: as indicated earlier, root designations follow Holladay's lexicon. In some cases several roots have been combined, for one reason or another, into one entry. In such situations the meanings of the various roots have been designated within the definition section.

Suggestions for Using this Student's Vocabulary

As has been widely acknowledged, learning vocabulary and retaining it are probably the most challenging aspects of learning Hebrew or Aramaic. In my experience the principal reason for this fact is that, in contrast to New Testament Greek, Old Testament Hebrew and Aramaic have virtually no cognate words in English. This requires much more rote memorization, or the formation of idiosyncratic memory devices. While each student must determine what works best for vocabulary study, here are a few common sense suggestions:

(1) Flash cards. While not all language students use them, home-made flash cards provide several advantages in vocabulary learning. First, you must go through the motions of writing the foreign word and its definition. Second, punched and carded on a ring holder, flash cards are very transportable for study at odd times and in many places. Third, flash cards can be (and probably should be) rearranged as you learn words, so that less time is spent on words that only need to be reviewed while more effort is concentrated on new or recalcitrant forms.

(2) Oral repetition. Repeating Hebrew and Aramaic words and their meanings out loud over and over (correctly!) introduces two critical factors into your vocabulary learning—pronunciation and hearing.

(3) Repeated writing. Used alone and in connection with oral repetition, repeated writing of OT vocabulary helps to establish a memory pattern.

Given the descending-frequency scheme with which this volume is prepared, a student can develop a Hebrew or Aramaic vocabulary as far as is necessary or desired (within the limits of this vocabulary volume). Within the ranges covered herein, by using the Index and referring to the appropriate Section/ Subsection location, the number of times a given word occurs in the OT can be determined.

INDEX

Hebrew and Aramaic words are indexed separately. Verbs are given no vowel points. Other words are also unpointed, except for forms with identical consonantal spelling. Root numbers in parentheses differentiate between identical spellings with different meanings. References are to Section number (1-6), and Subsection letter (A-Z, AA, BB). For convenience the number of occurrences is also given for Hebrew and Aramaic words.
